ENTRANCE TO SUNNYLANDS ESTATE

For more than 40 years, Ambassadors Walter and Leonore Annenberg welcomed political, business, educational, & entertainment leaders to Sunnylands, their 200-acre winter home in Rancho Mirage, California. In 2001, the couple established The Annenberg Foundation Trust at Sunnylands to preserve the estate as a place where world leaders could meet to discuss issues of national and international importance

Since opening Sunnylands in 2012, the trustees and staff have created what the Annenbergs envisioned. The estate and historic residence are providing a place of tranquility and hospitality where national and international leaders convene to “promote world peace and facilitate international agreement.” In that same time, more than half a million visitors have enjoyed Sunnylands Center & Gardens and its offerings.

A photograph of a cable car on the Palm Springs Tramway. The cable car is a rounded, yellow and black capsule with "PALM SPRINGS" written on its side in red. It is suspended from a cable and is moving towards the right. In the background, there is a tall, white metal tower structure on the left and a rocky, hilly landscape under a clear blue sky. The text "Palm Springs Tramway" is overlaid in the center of the image in a white, sans-serif font.

GENERAL PATTON TRAINING CENTER

“The Desert is a killer, and we must acclimate our soldiers to the climate.” -General George S. Patton Jr.

In February 1942, the U.S. Army assigned General Patton Jr. to train U.S. soldiers for combat under the harshest desert conditions possible in desert tank warfare. General Patton and his staff surveyed the southwestern United States and established the boundary of the Training Center. It encompassed 18,000 square miles of rugged, desolated and largely uninhabited lands within the Mojave and Colorado Deserts in California, Arizona and Southern Nevada. Patton established the headquarters for his
